

Dr Tracy Westerman Presents

Cultural Competency for Supervisors of Aboriginal People Workshop 2018

Register early as limited workshops are available
Sydney 18th & 19th October | Perth 1st & 2nd November

Dr Tracy Westerman is a descendant of the Njamaal people near Port Hedland, WA. She holds a Graduate Diploma in Psychology, a Master's Degree and Doctor of Philosophy (PhD) in Clinical Psychology. She is a recognised leader in Aboriginal mental health and in the area of cultural competency. She is a highly sought after trainer with her workshops sold out each time they have been delivered across Australia over the past eighteen years. She has run a successful business for 18 years in the absence of any government assistance or funding and as such has gained considerable skills in managing and navigating mainstream systems at a highly complex level. She has achieved national and international recognition for her innovative approaches to Aboriginal mental health and for her work in advancing the concept of cultural competency for organisations who wish to improve their capacity to employ and retain Aboriginal people in the workplace.

Participants walk away with practical skills grounded in the latest evidence base for effective practice.

ABOUT THESE PROGRAMS: IPS has been at the forefront of research, development and delivery of cultural competency intervention programs (CCIPs) since 1998. This work has focused on clearly defining the necessary skills, abilities and aptitudes that predict cultural competence. This information has then been used to design training programs to ensure that skills that are most relevant to working effectively with Aboriginal people are targeted. This program also focuses on the development of skills specific to retaining Aboriginal people in the workplace. IPS' research has determined that the causes of employment cessation amongst Aboriginal people were primarily related to the stress associated with the transition between community and workplace and cultural differences between worker and work environment.

CULTURAL COMPETENCY FOR SUPERVISORS OF ABORIGINAL PEOPLE WORKSHOP OBJECTIVES:

Participants complete the General Cultural Competency Profile (GCCP) to gauge cultural competencies. This training has evidence of improving cultural competencies.

- Better understand cultural competence and how to achieve focused, sustained shifts in core areas
- Understand the motivators and predictors of racial bias and develop the skills associated with cultural empathy
- Increasing knowledge of Aboriginal health, history, government policies & culture & how this links with cultural competence
- The impact of Identity Formation as a construct for supervision and support of Aboriginal employees
- Managing the Retention of Aboriginal people in the workplace.
- The most common causes of employment cessation & how best to support Aboriginal employees
- Understand how the community culture and historical context impacts on employees
- Supervision and Leadership models – can these be culturally adapted to suit Aboriginal employees
- Cultural Learning Style differences and impacts on supervision strategies, skills acquisition and mentoring. Differences in communication styles – practical strategies in the provision of feedback and ensuring motivational and cultural
- Culturally Competent Organisations - the common characteristics. Best practice policies & organisational structures that work
